HUNTING THE BRIDEGROOM.

Romantic Pastime Which Marked the Opening of the Street off Cairo at the World's Fair.

Chicago Inter Ocean. A section of the rainbow broke from its mooring about 11 o'clock Saturday morning, got inextricably taugled among a lot of camels and donkeys, and wandered up and down the Midway Plaisance amid the wailing of weird pipes and the wanted of were pipes and the growling of tom-toms. The crowd in the Midway tagged after the chromatic estray, and was enticed into the street of Cairo, where it was learned that the mixture of chromo and zoology was a representation of an Egyptian wedding procession, given to mark the opening of the Cairo exhibitation. tion. The bride, a swarthy beauty in white, with bright, black eyes peeping over the ayeeshah which covered most of her face, was in search of the bridegroom, and all her kinsman chivatrously assisted in the matrimonial

The coy maid of the Nile walked at the rear of the cavalcade within a canopy of gause. Her coming was heralded by a fife and drum corps of the oriental band, whose piping and tomtoming made a reasonably successful initation of Scotch bagpipes and Wagnerian opera in partnership. Wrestlers, naked to the waist, tumbled each other about as enthusiastically as though they were rolling on padded carpets instead of brick pavements. Swordsmen with long scimetars and half-grown shelids danced about each other with a counterfeit ferocity that would sell for ninety cents on the dollar, beating a rat-a-tat on each other's bucklers and slashing the air with a rockless abandon that made the spectators give way without a "stand back" from the envious Columbian guards.

Down the street, in the theatre, Fahumiet, a dark-eyed girl in a white muslin skirt and a gauzy waist, with golden ornaments in her black braids and dangling in strings from her neck, gave some of the Expytian dances. One of these resembled a Spanish fandango, tiny cymbals on the fingers answering for the castanets. In the sword dance she showed how near she could come to stabbing herself without doing it, and in a third effort she wore a crown of lighted candles, her object being to keep up the dance without extinguishing the candles. The crowning performance was the dans du ventre, a sonsuous oriental system of rythmical contortions that made some of the ladies leave the theatre, and at its concontortions that made some of the ladies leave the theatre, and at its conclusion Fahumit threw horself on a divan and blushingly hid her face in a handkerchief. The music was furnished by a couple of gourds converted into fiddles and a pair of tom-toms, and when they tuned up an irreverent spectator advised the squatting musicians to "play ball," and they did.

At the western end of the village Soudanese and Nabians, housed in bark huts shaned like big hay cocks, were of drums and cowbells. Up and down both sides of the streets were the open

THE BRIGGS' TRIAL

As Viewed by a Catholic Priest-Father Ducoy's O pinton.
Father Ducey in an Interview in the Washington Post.

"Well, I trust the ecclesiastical jury sitting in his case will not execute this man either with a rope or by electrocution. Dr. Briggs has been in the chair of trial long enough, and I hope he will pull through. He is a scholar and an honest man, and is only practicing the basic principle of Protestantism—private interpretation. Then why should he be condemned? We Catholics are not frightened if science should knock the bottom out of the Old Testament. We have never claimed the Bible as a rule of faith. Biblical scholars in the Catholic and Protestant churches would nct contend that Moses wrote every-thing in the Pontateuch, or that David was the sole author of the Psalms. Sci-entific investigation will continue to go entific investigation will continue to go on by religious men, and the pope, we are told is soon to issue an encyclical on biblical studies. For over thirty years from the first preaching of Christianity the world had no New Testament. The church existed without it, and it could exist now without it, through the divine authority of Jesus Christ.

"One more word about the case. My friend, Joseph Chonte, who is full of humor, told me of a conversation between himself and Col. McCook, counsel for the prosecution.

"'McCook,' said Choate, 'I know what you and Alexander are driving at. You want to break up the Presbyterian chuch, so as to get a big retainer fee to help in its reorganization.'"

A Church Suit Settled.
